how to use this book

This cookbook is a compilation of recipes I have enjoyed from various sources, but mostly the Bon Appétit magazine. Many are modified to my liking, since the folks at Bon Appétit get ratios off sometimes (e.g., no recipe in this world needs a fourth cup of dill, not even pot pie [pg. 9]).

Since many recipes are largely about ingredient preparation and assembly, most of the instructions are described in the ingredient list itself. Note the instructions next to each ingredient and the labeled groups that some ingredients are ordered in. To prioritize the cooking experience over ingredient collection, some ingredients are listed multiple times (indicated by a [‡] symbol).

Different recipe dietary types are marked next to recipe titles as follows:

- GF gluten-free
- V vegetarian
- VV vegan

I assume you have basic ingredients handy (e.g., common spices, flour, cooking oils, and other American cooking staples). You might also benefit from having a few other frequently-used ingredients on hand: rice vinegar, hoisin sauce, miso, tahini, and dry white wine.

Hope you enjoy!

Love you (probably, idk who you are),

taking care of cast iron

Cast iron cookware has a few unique benefits: it (1) is stovetop- and oven-safe, (2) heats more evenly, (3) lasts a really long time, and (4) resists sticking. A few important notes:

- Buy real cast iron. Some cheap cast iron cookware is not made of iron, and cannot be maintained well. There are many reliable companies to keep an eye out for, including Lodge, Field Company, and Lancaster.
- Monitor the seasoning. Seasoning is just several thin layers of polymerized oil (i.e., long, durable chains formed with oil molecules), which gives cast iron its dark color and stick resistance. Cast iron generally comes seasoned when purchased, but it can wear off over time.
 - Cooking with oil in cast iron will build up some seasoning on its own.
 - You might notice while scraping your cast iron that a brown substance seems to surface. It looks like surprise rust, but it is actually seasoning, which is dark brown.
 - While scraping off food waste you may reveal a silver-looking patch, which is the iron. In this case, you should vigorously scrape the whole pan, removing protrusions and loose bits of seasoning, then reseason.
- To season the pan, drizzle <1 Tbsp of oil and wipe with a paper towel to leave a thin layer on the business surfaces of the cookware. Cook in an oven at ~400°F for one hour, upside down to prevent oil pooling. Repeat this once or twice more.
- Clean and dry it after each use. Letting water or food waste sit on cast iron can make it rust, which is difficult to correct. Unlike what they might teach you in school, I assure you that cast iron definitely can be cleaned with soap as the layers of seasoning are very protective.

1/4 cup rice vinegar
1 Tbsp sugar
1/2 tsp toasted sesame oil

Fill a pot large and deep enough for the cabbage halfway full with water. Bring to a boil. Cut a cone shape out of the bottom of the cabbage to remove much of the stem. Set the cabbage stem-down into the water. Boil, covered, for 10 mins to soften leaves.

Mix group A. Scoop this filling into softened cabbage leaves once they can be handled. Use a toothpick to hold rolls together when necessary.

Steam rolls, in batches if necessary, for 11-13 mins. Mix group B to make sauce and serve.

gnocchi

adapted from ANTI-CHEF on YouTube

1.5 lb plum tomatoes
1 yellow onion skinned, cut in half
4 Tbsp butter
4 golden potatoes skinned, coarsely diced
2 cup flour
1 oz Parmesan grated

Place tomatoes in boiling water for 1 min. Remove tomato skin once the tomatoes are handleable. Rinse in cold water. Cut lengthwise and remove stems. Cook in covered saucepan for 10 mins over medium heat. Blend the tomatoes, then add onion and butter. Cook uncovered on a slow but steady simmer until reduced, 45-90 mins. Add salt to taste.

Meanwhile, boil diced potatoes until tender and mashable to avoid chunks. Strain potatoes and puree. Add flour to pureed potato a bit at a time until the dough is soft, smooth and light in color. The exact amount of flour added will differ based on potato size. Roll dough to ~1/2" cylinders. Cut desired size to make individual gnoccho. I don't care about making them look pretty, figure it out yourself if you do.

Generously salt water in a large pot and bring to a light boil. Add gnocchi, only enough to cover the bottom of the pot in a single layer at a time. Allow each gnocchi to float to the top and stay there for ~10 secs before removing.

Soon after removing, add sauce to gnocchi to avoid sticking. Serve with Parmesan.
